Drivers License For Flying

Federal minimum security requirements include verifying every ID applicant's identity, putting anti-counterfeit technology into the production of the card and conducting background checks on the people issuing the driver's licenses.. Currently, 26 states plus Washington D C. While states have been working towards compliance for years, in some cases the process was slowed by the required passage or repeal of certain laws.. Updated 10/4/2017As if traveling wasn't already complicated enough, a federal mandate is imposing new requirements on state driver's licenses and ID cards for use in air travel.. prohibits federal agencies, including the Transportation Security Administration (TSA), from accepting identification from states that are not compliant with certain security standards.
